THE AUSTRALIAN SOCIETY FOR
QUANTITATIVE POLITICAL SCIENCE
2018 ANNUAL CONFERENCE, CANBERRA
10-11 DECEMBER 2018

WELCOME

Welcome to the 7th Annual Conference of the Australian Society for Quantitative Political Science in Canberra! The Australian Society for Quantitative Political Science (ASQPS) was formed in December 2012 following a workshop on quantitative methods in political science, held in Melbourne. One of the main activities of the Society is to hold an annual conference. The Society has four core aims:

1. To build a more robust network of scholars doing quantitative research in Australia through the auspices of the Australian Society for Quantitative Political Science with a further aim of establishing a formal standing group as part of the Australian Political Studies Association.
2. To reflect on the use of established and new techniques (including the use of new software) of quantitative analysis in political science, as well as reflecting on how these relate to Australian political science.
3. To consider issues of measurement (broadly speaking) in political science.
4. To help strengthen the international networks between scholars using quantitative approaches in Australia and abroad.

We hope that this year's conference will contribute to achieving these aims over the next two days.

Government Formation: Matching Theory and Empirics

Keynote Presentation, Monday 4.00pm

Biography

I am a Professor in the Department of Political Science at The Pennsylvania State University. I received my Ph.D. in 2004 from New York University. I also studied at Sciences Po (l'Institut d'études politiques de Paris) and the University of Chicago.

I study political institutions, with a particular interest in coalition formation. My early research and first book, The Logic of Pre-Electoral Coalition Formation, examines the determinants and consequences of electoral alliances in parliamentary democracies. My most recent book is about Multi-level Electoral Politics, and I am currently working on a book project on post-election government formation processes in Europe. I've also published a textbook with a couple of colleagues, Principles of Comparative Politics. Much of my work focuses on advanced industrialized democracies but my graduate students are working hard on broadening my knowledge to other areas.

In addition to being a co-editor for the British Journal of Political Science, an associate editor for Research & Politics, and serving on the editorial boards for the American Political Science Review, Comparative Political Studies, and Political Science Research and Methods, I am a co-editor for a new series, the Oxford Politics of Institutions Series, for Oxford University Press. I have also been involved in the women in methods group – I was the organizer and host for the 4th Annual Visions in Methodology (VIM) Conference, serve as a VIM mentor for female graduate students and junior faculty, and served as a member of the diversity committee for APSA's Political Methodology Section. My research has been funded by Canada's Social Sciences and Research Council through my participation in the Making Electoral Democracy Work project, and I have also benefited from time spent at the University of Mannheim with the Political Economy of Reforms project.
